HOUSES OF RELIGIOUS MEN

The "Works" of each House refer either to the Institution the Community runs e.g. House of Formation, Shrine, Retreat House, etc.) or to the area of the Apostolate in which it is engaged (e.g. Education, Social Welfare, etc.). While all Religious Communities are, in a sense, involved in the life of the parishes in which they are located many are more directly so: some of them are entrusted with the full running of parishes, while others are closely associated in parish activities. In the latter case, the name of the parish is mentioned within brackets.

6. The figures include all religious men's institutes in the archdiocese.

CONCLUSION

The distribution of religious men's institutes in Greater Bombay and its suburbs is uneven, with the majority located in the central and western parts of the city. The institutes are mainly focused on education, social welfare, and health services. The distribution of institutes in the various civil units and parishes varies widely, with some areas having a higher concentration than others. Further research is needed to understand the reasons behind this distribution and to develop strategies to improve access to religious services in areas with lower concentrations.
RELIGIOUS INSTITUTES OF WOMEN

Women belonging to Religious Institutes have been working in the Archdiocese of Bombay for little more than 130 years. The Congregation of the Religious of Jesus and Mary was the first Institute of Religious Women to begin real work in Bombay. They came in 1850 all the way from Agra in bullock-carts, invited by Bishop Anastasius Hartmann OFM Cap, the then Apostolic Administrator of Bombay. (In 1848, the Loreto Sisters of Rathfarnham had been brought by Bishop Whelan to Bombay, but their efforts at running an Orphanage for girls did not prove successful; they left Bombay for Calcutta).

Between 1850 and the end of the Double Jurisdiction in Bombay (1928), we find five other Institutes working in the Vicariate of Bombay: the Daughters of the Cross (1863), the Franciscan Hospitaler Sisters (1911), the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary (1922), and the Carmelite Sisters of Trivandrum (1922). These have been labouring uninterruptedly ever since their entry into the Archdiocese. The fifth Institute was that of the Sisters of St. Francis Xavier (then also known as the Xaverian Sisters). They had a Convent in Agashi in the first quarter of this century, but when they closed that House, they took up hardy missionary work in the newly-founded Zaroli Mission from 1926 to 1943. They returned to Bellary after that, and re-entered the Archdiocese in 1947 to open a House at Koliwada, Vasai (In 1951 their name was changed to Sisters of OL of Fatima).

In the course of the last 53 years (1928-1981) 54 new Religious Institutes of Women started work in the Archdiocese, of which 2 have sprung up in Bombay itself: the Poor Sisters of Our Lady, a diocesan congregation constituted in 1937, and the Society of the Helpers of Mary founded in 1962. That works out to an average of a new Institute in Bombay every year. A better picture of the enormous growth of Religious Women’s Institutes, and consequently of the number of Nuns, in the Archdiocese is obtained when one considers the following:

Archbishop T. Roberts SJ (1937-50)
Cardinal Valerian Gracias (1950-78)
Archbishop Simon Pimenta (1978- )

The above table speaks for itself and indicates the role that Cardinal Gracias played in the introduction of Institutes of diverse charisms and apostolic endeavours into the Archdiocese.

Today there are 60 Religious Institutes of Women working in the Archdiocese, counting within their ranks a total of 1,445 Sisters. Table 8 lists the 60 Religious Institutes. The Table also tells us that of the 1,445 Sisters, 1,338 are Indians and 107 foreigners, and that these 60 Institutes have 140 Houses in the Archdiocese.
