Linguistics

Introduction

Language is the basis of all communications and thoughts. All primitive or sophisticated civilization uses some kind of language to communicate.

Linguistics is the scientific study of language. It studies the common element of all languages and applies it to archeology, anthropology, psychology, philosophy, sociology, English, computer science and indeed to almost all subjects known to mankind.

Students of linguistics learn phonetics, grammar (syntax), semantics (the study of meanings of words) the relationship between language and mind, language and society.

They also learn lexicography (making of dictionaries), and language teaching. Students are asked to take up an Indian language on which no work has been done so far.

It has two divisions, theoretic and applied.

Theoretical linguistics is the branch of linguistics that is most concerned with developing models of linguistic knowledge. The main fields are:

Theoretical linguistics

Phonetics, the study of the physical sounds of languages, particularly the production and perception of those sounds.

Phonology, the study of how sounds are organized and used in languages to encode meaning.

Morphology, the study of the internal structure of words.

Syntax, the study of the rules that govern the way the words in a sentence come together.

Semantics, the study of meaning.

Pragmatics, the study of the way language can communicate more than is explicitly stated.
Applied linguistics

Just like any science, after you learn a theory, you have to apply it to real life situations.

Research of applied linguistics is concerned with the theoretical and empirical investigation of real world problems in which language is a central issue.

Major branches of applied linguistics include

- Bilingualism and multilingualism
- Computer-mediated communication (cmc)
- Conversation analysis
- Contrastive linguistics
- Deaf linguistic
- Language assessment
- Literacies
- Discourse analysis

Applied linguistics

Applied linguistics is an interdisciplinary field of study that identifies, investigates, and offers solutions to language-related real-life problems. Some of the academic fields related to applied linguistics are education, linguistics, psychology, computer science, anthropology, and sociology. (Wikipedia)

Language acquisition - The study of how we acquire our native language and how we learn other languages

Psycholinguistics - The study of the association between thinking and language.

Neurolinguistics - The study of the neural mechanisms involved in the comprehension, production and abstract knowledge of language.

Sociolinguistics, the study of the relationship between language and society.
Historical linguistics, the study of the origin of words (also known as diachronic linguistics or philology).

Anthropological linguistics, the study of the relationship between language and culture.

Discourse analysis, the study of language in the context of conversation.

There are several specializations for the linguistics:

Etymologist - One who studies the origin of words.

Syntax, the study of the rules that govern the way the words in a sentence come together.

Psycholinguistics, the study of the connection between thinking and the use of language.

Sociolinguistics, the study of the interrelationship between language and society, and language and culture.

Discourse analyst - Who studies language in the context of conversation.

Phonologist - Who studies how sounds are organized and used in languages.

Semiotics, semiotic studies, or semiology is the study of signs and symbols, both individually and grouped into sign systems. It includes the study of how meaning is constructed and understood.

Translation software designer - A linguist with advanced computer programming knowledge, who can design a translation program.

Lexicographer - One who develops an entry or definition of a word, term, or concept to be included in a monolingual or bilingual dictionary.

Benefits:

A course in linguistics can sharpen one’s writing and argumentative skills. It also helps the individual acquire mastery over data analysis, synthesis of speech, child language etc.

A thorough understanding of the social, cultural and psychological perspective enables the candidate to understand the mysteries of speech, sound, words and sentences which are the building blocks of a language.
Scope in India and Abroad:

There are plenty of growth opportunities here in India as well as in other countries.

- Job opportunities for linguists are available in Central Institute of Indian Languages, Mysore, Institute of Hindi Language, New Delhi and Anthropological Survey of India.
- Hospitals look for linguists as speech therapists.
- Call centers need them as speech trainers.
- Ad agencies, journalism, business and corporate communication all need language specialists.
- Linguists work for a range of organizations, including universities and colleges, high tech companies, research institutions, consulting firms, government, and the military.
- If your knowledge of linguistics is consummate with technical expertise then you can design computer software.
- Linguists are hired by universities to research rare dialects as a part of specific project. With post graduation degree you can be a faculty of linguistics.
- Publishers often recruit linguists for online dictionaries.
- Neurolinguists and speech therapists are in demand for treating pediatric and adult speech problems.
Remuneration

Remuneration in the field of linguistics depends upon the organization with which the person is working. A beginner can earn between Rs10000-Rs15000 per month.

Those who want to build a career in teaching foreign languages can earn around Rs 10000 – Rs 20000 per month. Translators get paid between Rs 50 – 100 per page. Those working with embassies may receive remuneration of Rs 8000 p.m. - 10000 p.m. Interpreters generally earn around Rs 300 to 500 per hour.

Qualifications:

For acquiring a Bachelor’s degree in linguistics one needs to pass the Higher Secondary or 10 + 2 examinations with humanities as one of the main disciplines.

For Masters you need any Bachelor’s degree.

For acquiring a post graduation degree a graduation in linguistics is a must.

Aggregate of marks should be at least 50% .

I have provided individual requirements of the institutes.

Linguistic Career Courses in India

Many Universities and institutions in India offer this course and follow the regular semester time table.

I have provided a list of these institutions and their addresses.

All these links are working and correct as on June 2011.
The Institutes

1. The English and Foreign Languages University

The English and Foreign Languages University (EFL University) is created by the Indian Parliament. It has several schools.

SCHOOL OF LANGUAGE SCIENCES is concerned with the discipline of English Language and Linguistics. The School has following Departments:

1. Department of Phonetics and Spoken English
2. Department of Linguistics and Contemporary English
3. Department of Computational Linguistics

The teaching will be undertaken by the Departments of the School at both under-graduate and post-graduate levels.

However, the main Endeavour of the School will be focused on research work to be carried out at the M.Phil and Ph.D levels.

It has campuses in Hyderabad, Lucknow and Shillong.

EFL UNIVERSITY LUCKNOW CAMPUS offers

- M. Phil English (Linguistics & Phonetics)
- Ph. D in English (Linguistics & Phonetics)
